- AUTHORS (flush with the left margin, listed by author last names, first, and middle initials; separated by commas, with an & before the last author)
 - PUBLICATION DATE (in parentheses followed by a period)
 - TITLE OF THE ARTICLE (receives sentence-style capitalization, ends with a period; Psychopathic Personality Inventory is capitalized because it is a proper name)
 - TITLE OF THE JOURNAL (receives headline-style capitalization, is italicized, and should be followed by a comma)
 - VOLUME NUMBER (italicized)
 - ISSUE NUMBER (immediately follows the volume number in parentheses, is not italicized, and should be followed by a comma)
 - PAGE RANGE (ends with a period)
 - ONLINE RETRIEVAL NOTATION (retrieval date + where the article was retrieved from, with a period at the end if referencing a database). It is acceptable to put the name of the database versus the full URL if the article is obtained from a well known database in lieu of a more obscure source.
- NOTE: If you are referencing a URL, there should not be a period at the end of the URL.

Basic Rules of an APA Reference List

- At the top of your list of references, centered, should be the word: References
- Do not number your references, use bullets, or any other markers. The purpose of the first line of a reference being flush with the left margin; whereas, the subsequent lines are indented is to differentiate the references.
- References should be listed in alphabetical order according to the last name of the first author. For example, if you had three articles, and the last names of the first authors for your sources were Smith, Jones, and Thomas, you would list Jones first, Smith second, and Thomas third.
- Do not rearrange the order of authors for a single article. For example, in the reference above, the order of the authors should appear as they are, and not be rearranged as Eden, Lilienfeld, Patrick, Poythress, and Test.
- The first word following a colon (:) or a question mark (?) should be capitalized in the title of the article. Proper names should be capitalized as well.
- Your references should be double-spaced (do not quadruple space between references)
