Literature Summary

Every literature review should always have a summary which highlights the most pertinent and relevant findings from the included studies. The summary will serve as a natural lead into the next section of your paper which is an analysis of the policy implications based on the literature combined with your own interpretation and insights.

Appendix

(if needed)

This section is not required; however, if you believe it is necessary to include a table, chart, or other supplementary information, this is where it will appear. If you have only one item to include, you will have an Appendix (cover page) such as this, which is followed by the actual item to be included. If you have more than one item to include, you will have a cover page for each separate item, and each cover page will be labeled as: Appendix A, Appendix B, Appendix C and so on.
